What is a First Aid competition?

First Aid competitions have been a St. John Ambulance tradition since they were first introduced in England in 1880. The primary purpose of the competition is to provide teams an opportunity to test their First Aid knowledge and skills in a realistic simulated incident.

Teams of up to four members from across the Province compete for the honour of being the top First Aid Team in one of five divisions:

Standard First Aid - Youth
Standard First Aid - Industry
Medical First Responder
Advanced First Aid
Emergency Responder

Teams perform in a timed scenario to provide First Aid treatment to casualties in a mock situation. The scenarios are created using real props and volunteer casualties with simulated injuries. Teams need to:

- clear the area of any hazards
- determine the number of casualties and their injuries
- treat their injuries
- prepare the casualties for transport by EMS

A judge is assigned to each casualty and records the First Aider's responses and treatment. Because scenarios remain unknown to the First Aiders until their turn to compete, teamwork, critical thinking, and First Aid skills are all tested. The team with the highest score wins their division.

Who can enter?

All companies and organizations with First Aiders or Emergency Responders are encouraged to enter a team. Teams from office-based businesses, industry, schools, retail, community organizations, First Aid volunteers and instructors, mine rescue, and Emergency Medical Responders compete with each other.

The Standard First Aid - Youth division is open to trained individuals 12 - 18 years of age who hold a valid First Aid certificate.

The Standard First Aid - Industry division is open to trained individuals, 18 years and older.

The Medical First Responder (MFR) division is open to those 16 years of age and older with MFR training.

The Advanced First Aid division is open to those 16 years of age and older with Advanced First Aid certification.

The Emergency Responder division is open to those 18 years of age and older with EMR, EMT, Paramedic, or higher levels of training.

What level of First Aid do I need?

Teams of up to four people enter one division based on their level of training:

- Emergency First Aid: EFA & Level A CPR training.
- Standard First Aid: SFA & Level C CPR training.
- Medical First Responder: 40 hour MFR course.
- Advanced First Aid: AFA & HCP CPR training.
- Emergency Responder: EMR, EMT, Paramedic, or higher levels of training.

Trophies

- Best Team Overall (Highest Aggregate Team Score)
- Best Novice Team
- Best Team in each division
- Best Team Captain in each division

Banquet

Relax with co-workers, family / friends, and other teams, enjoy a great meal, and learn if your team won a trophy and / or if you won a door prize draw. And, most importantly, make plans for next year's Competition!

Why Compete?

- Your First Aid skills are kept sharp
- See how good your First Aid team really is
- Recognition as the best First Aid team or captain in your division and a trophy
- Meet other competitors; learn how their response teams handle the scenario
- It's a challenge AND it's fun!
